Further examples for third parties applying on behalf of data subject. The guidance states that it is the third party's responsibility to provide evidence of their authority. However, we have family members submitting requests with a signed authority evidencing consent, but when checked directly with the data subject, they don't necessarily want their parent, for example, having all details of the support they are receiving from a social worker. There are a couple of issues - individuals may not want to go against the wishes of other family members, so will give their consent; also, they may not appreciate the level of detail that is on their files.. As a local authority we check with the data subject and offer to give them the information directly, for them to share, if they choose.

Q4 We have found that data protection professionals often struggle with applying and defining 'manifestly unfounded or excessive' subject access requests. We would like to include a wide range of examples from a variety of sectors to help you. Please provide some examples of manifestly unfounded and excessive requests below (if applicable).

Q8 Please provide any further comments or suggestions you may have about the draft guidance.

We are concerned at the suggestion that the timescale cannot be paused when seeking clarification. How can the request be processed if the requestor hasn't clarified/specified the information they seek? This seems unreasonable and not in line with the Regulations. We are a Unitary Authority and a request may relate to a number of different service areas such as Adult Social Care, Childrens Services, Housing Benefit, Council Tax, Housing Support, Education, Libraries, Planning, Elections, Leisure services, Rights of Way, Highways etc. It is unreasonable to expect us to carry out searches of all these service areas if the requestor did not clarify which departments they may have had contact with. It would waste a lot of public resources if we did have to carry out searches of all these areas and then the requestor confirmed that they were only interested in their leisure centre membership.
